Vermont Master Composter Course offered this Fall

Interested in learning more about the latest processes for producing compost, using compost and reducing greenhouse emissions? Learn how to build piles, improve soil, enhance plant resistance to disease and insects, produce worm compost, and more!

For just $40, you can take an exceptional course offered by Vermont Master Composter. The fee includes the course plus an extensive “Vermont Master Composter Resource Manual”. This course is designed to increase composting and extend composting information to the public. If desired, course participants may also take part in an Internship to gain practical experience and earn Master Composter Certification by volunteering in community or school composting projects.

The course will be held on 4 Monday evenings, October 18th - November 8th from 6:00 -9:00 pm. Registration deadline is October 8th. Classes are held at Vermont Interactive Television sites at the following locations: Bennington, Brattleboro, Montpelier, Johnson, Lyndon, Middlebury, Randolph Center, Rutland, Springfield, St. Albans, Waterbury, White River Jct. and Williston.

This program is managed by UVM Extension Master Gardener with funding from Vermont ANR Compost Center: Waste Management Division. The course is also assisted by volunteers from both the Vermont Master Composter and the Vermont Master Gardener programs. This synergy greatly adds to the value of the course.
